

Starting college is like being born all over again. It's like moving to a new town. It's like going into the Witness Protection Program. It's a chance to start from scratch, with a whole new identity and a fresh outlook on the world. If in high school you never liked being called Andrew, now you can be called Drew. If you've always wondered about strange-looking rocks, now you can study them. So just make sure you squeeze all the juice out of those four years. Take the hard courses – the Great Books and the Human Bio – but also take Ballroom Dancing. Spend hours and hours in the library, followed by 45 minutes of mud football. Because college is nothing but one giant opportunity. And, as with most opportunities in life, you will never get the chance to do it over.
